DRIVING YOUR BOTTOM LINE

Aberdeen Research published a study recently that outlined three important action areas for achieving transportation management success:

- Connectivity and visibility
- Advanced optimization
- Organizational collaboration

Even for a small to mid-size company, participating in the extended enterprise becomes a crucial success factor. Your customers expect you to have the system capability to flexibly deal with their specialized freight needs. And, keep them current on the status of their deliveries.

The market is converging. Third party logistics (3PL) companies are acquiring power units and becoming trucking companies. Traditional freight carriers are leasing warehouse space and getting into the 3PL business. And, freight consolidators are brokering freight at an ever increasing rate.

It's no longer enough to offer solutions that deal with one business model. Today's transportation management system must be adaptable to the needs of Carriers, Brokers and Shippers. And, be capable of seamlessly integrating with a warehousing system. Accellos One Transport is all of that and more.

“U.S. transportation is reaching a near crisis level, with skyrocketing fuel costs, driver shortages, road congestion, and trade-lane imbalances converging at once. To ease this burden, more companies are considering the adoption of enterprise TMS applications.”
